TO MERCHANTS, SETTLERS, AND CARRIERS.
MR. JAMES STEWART begs to return thanks to his numerous friends for the liberal support he has uniformly received, during the period of his occupancy of and trusts that unceasing endeavours to give satisfaction in every branch of his trade, will secure him the continuance of a fair share of public patronage.
In addition to the ordinary routine of business, at the suggestion of several individuals, both in town and country, who in the transmission of packages have repeatedly experienced most vexatious loss and disappointment, Mr. Stewart purposes opening at his establishment a
PARCELS BOOKING OFFICE,
where the payment of a small sum for entry (say twopence for an ordinary parcel) will ensure its speedy and safe delivery at any inland destination within the customary precincts of land carriage
Also, will be attached to the premises
A CARRIER'S REGISTRATION OFFICE, where heavy goods will be securely stored upon a merely nominal Commission, till an opportunity offers for forwarding them according to directions, and as the extensive Yards of the WOOLPACK have long been known as the great central rendezvous of up-country teams, but a trifling delay can ever occur previous to such an opportunity being afforded.
Carriers arriving from the country will find it desirable to REGISTER at the above Office, as every exertion will be used to supply them with loading; and the tediousness and uncertainty and expense now attending their stay in Sydney almost wholly avoided.
From having been closely connected in business with by far the largest number of the team drivers upon the road, during a period of nearly seven years, Mr. Stewart has become sufficiently acquainted with the individual characters of the men to be enabled to form a tolerably just conclusion as to who amongst them are the most trustworthy, and who the least so. Merchants and others sending valuable goods will thus be relieved from the anxiety and apprehension which must be felt when property is entrusted, (as is often the case,) to persons wholly unknown to them.
Mr. Stewart further begs to intimate, that persons favouring him with the disposal of any kind of Stock or country produce, may rely upon his assiduity being exerted in securing the best possible price, and immediately applying the proceeds according to the wishes of his principal.
N.B. On Hand, the usual stock of Wines, brandies, gins, rums, both in and out of bond; also a small quantity of imported direct from the celebrated distillery of Messrs. Beith, Ross, and Co. Connoisseurs desirous of procuring a supply are invited to make early application. For the convenience of such and small families, lots have been prepared in cases of from one dozen upwards, at 24s. Country orders containing a remittance promptly attended to. 6511

THE "GOLDEN FLEECE"

The Petrel has made a quick passage of five days from Port Phillip. The schooner Will Watch sailed from Port Phillip for Sydney on the 20th instant, and was passed by the Petrel off Cape Liptrap the following day. Her passengers are Messrs. Sayers, Thomas, and Marks; and the cargo consists of 49 bales wool and 26 casks tallow. The steamer Shamrock arrived at Melbourne, from Launceston, late on Friday night last, and would probably leave again for Sydney on Monday afternoon. The brig Christina sailed from Melbourne for Port Fairy and Sydney on the 19th instant. The brig Marmion sailed for Singapore the same day, with a cargo of 140 tierces beef, 150 bags flour, 250 bags biscuit, and 29 bags wheat. The ship Thetis sailed from Port Phillip for London on the 20th instant, with a cargo of 1364 bales wool, 486 casks and 4 cases tallow. The barque Lysander sailed from Geelong for London on the 21st instant, with a cargo of 1680 bales wool, 685 casks and 69 boxes tallow, 2 tierces tongues. The schooner Phœbe was to sail from Melbourne for Circular Head and Sydney on the 21st instant. The Petrel was in company with a large brig, apparently bound for Sydney, from Bass' Straits as far as Twofold Bay, where they parted on Tuesday last, the former vessel having put into the bay on that evening from contrary winds, where she remained however only three hours.

The Caldew will hand alongside the Circular Wharf this day, to discharge, and the Taglioni will discharge at Botts' Wharf.

The schooner Effort, hence the 29th March, arrived at Launceston on the 16th instant.

Sydney Morning Herald.

FRIDAY, APRIL 27, 1849.

"Sworn to no Master, of no Sect am I."

DISPERSION OF THE CONVICTS.

While we are grateful to His Excellency Sir Charles Fitz Roy for the prompt and energetic manner in which he made known to the Home Government the proceedings of the colonists, in public meeting assembled, with reference to transportation, accompanied by such "strong representations" from himself as will, he believes, "have the effect of causing any measures which were in progress for sending out convicts to this colony to be suspended until he shall be enabled to place the Secretary of State in possession of the deliberate opinion of the Legislative Council on the subject;" and while we are also grateful for his assurance that "no Government influence will be used in any manner" to bias the votes of honorable members; we are yet grieved that his Excellency should have refused to exercise in favour of the Sydney district that discretion which he seems to have had no scruple in exercising on behalf of the Port Phillip district.

In the interview between the Governor and the Anti-Transportation Committee on Tuesday last, it was intimated that the Committee would feel greatly relieved if His Excellency could enable them to inform their constituents that in case of the arrival of convicts on these shores, the men would be employed exclusively on public works until Her Majesty's pleasure could be known. On this point His Excellency's written answer says—"I have no alternative but to obey the instructions which I have received." Here is the inconsistency of which the inhabitants of the Middle District complain. When a favour was asked for Melbourne, which, according to his instructions, he had no alternative but to refuse, he at once conceded it; when a still smaller favour is asked for Sydney, his instructions are pleaded as opposing an insuperable bar to its bestowment.

We are not blind to the difficulties of His Excellency's position. Look which way he will, he finds difficulties staring him in the face. On the one side his orders from home demand obedience, and the convicts claim their promised tickets; on the other the colonists hold up the written pledges of Her Majesty's Government, and insist upon their scrupulous fulfilment. One or other of these conflicting appeals must needs be rejected; but as none of them can be rejected without risk, the question resolves itself into a choice of evils. It is a great evil to disobey the commands of lawful authority; it would be a great evil to refuse to the convicts the indulgence they had been led to expect on their arrival: but will it not be a far greater evil to bring dishonour upon the British Crown, by doing that which Her Majesty's constitutional organ had solemnly engaged should not be done? This is really the point for His Excellency's consideration. When the colonists beseech him not to allow the convicts to be dispersed, they not only ask him to step between themselves and a great public injury—they also ask him to step between his Sovereign and manifest dishonour. While their prayer is dictated by feelings of self-protection, it is at the same time backed by considerations of national good faith.

And we think His Excellency and his advisers* ought to ponder well a further question. Assuming Earl Grey to be a man of high integrity, and to have been led astray by misrepresentations of facts, what would be his lordship's feelings were he at this moment by Sir Charles Fitz Roy's side? Would he not at once admit that he had fallen into a capital mistake—that, misconceiving the inclinations of the colonists, he had unwittingly broken the engagements whereby he had bound himself to respect those inclinations—and that a regard for his own veracity and for the dignity of his Royal Mistress left him no alternative but, at whatever amount of inconvenience and expense, to forbid the convicts to be landed on our shores? Can any honest man doubt that, if Lord Grey be likewise an honest man, these would be his lordship's conclusions, had he the local knowledge possessed by our Government? Is it not the duty of our Government, then, to do that which they must know it to be morally certain would be done by the Minister, were he in their circumstances? And if they refuse to take this course, will they not incur rebuke for having yielded blind and slavish obedience, where they ought to have exercised a firm and enlightened discretion—for having, in fine, obeyed orders which they well knew to have been issued in error, and which, in the estimation of all reasonable persons, would have been "more honoured in the breach than the observance?"

Touching the determination of our Executive to obey these orders, however, we are told by His Excellency's memorandum, that "in order to render the services of the convicts most extensively useful in parts where it is still very difficult to obtain labour, they will not be landed in Sydney, but receive their tickets for the remote districts of the colony." At the first blush, this seems to be a very judicious arrangement; but a little reflection will show that it is fraught with mischief.

In the first place, there are the dangers pointed out by Mr. Norton, as the organ of the Committee in their interview with the Governor:—"We are unable to shut our eyes against the possibility, in the widely extended settlements, of the formation of bands of outlaws which the colony has no force that is capable of controlling. The reduction of the military force of the colony on the cessation of its penal character, and the almost total absence in the remote districts of police establishments, added to the depressed state of the public funds, afford no security against acts of outrage the most violent and continued." The truth of this representation is past dispute. The characters who require the strong arm of penal discipline to keep them in order, are to be sent to places where such discipline is out of the question. They are to be sent where neither military bayonet nor constabulary staff will over-awe their lawless propensities; where the voice of the spiritual instructor will seldom if ever be heard; where the free population is scanty and powerless; where, of all places, hardened villany will be most impatient of the restraints of honest labour; and where crime may be perpetrated with the boldest chances of impunity.

And not only so. The setting apart of the remote districts as the convict locale will inevitably make those parts of the colony the objects of terror to free emigrants. Already is it found most difficult to persuade new comers to accept employment in the far interior. They shrink from it with all sorts of harrowing fancies; they fear to bury themselves in solitudes so drear; they fear the venom of snakes; they fear the cannibalism of the blacks; and now there is to be added another ground of alarm—the outrages of convicts let loose. As virtuous men, the disgrace of being associated with such characters is what they will never submit to. As husbands, fathers, or brothers, the idea of taking their wives, daughters, or sisters into a wilderness peopled with the most abandoned of mankind, will be revolting to every feeling of their breasts. And, since our newly arrived immigrants have no accurate conception as to where these remote districts may be, they will naturally suppose that by remote districts are meant all places not in the neighbourhood of Sydney or other populous towns.† The consequence will be, that to the towns they will cling more tenaciously than ever; and all who shall come after them will do the same.

The Governor's promise to disperse the convicts through the distant interior, though at first sight encouraging, is, under these views, a real cause of apprehension and alarm. And so is the whole system out of which the promise arises—nor can the wit of man ever make it otherwise.

But His Excellency assures us, "that there can be no desire on the part either of the Imperial or of the Local Government, to continue transportation to this colony, even in the modified form now proposed, unless it should meet with the concurrence of the colonists, to be expressed through the medium of their legitimate representatives in the Legislative Council." But has it escaped His Excellency's recollection, that he said the same thing, almost in these very words, to a Deputation who waited upon him in 1846? And had not Mr. Secretary Gladstone said the same thing before him? And has not Earl Grey reiterated the same thing again and again? And yet what is the upshot of all these fine promises? Why, the colony, under the advice of this noble pledge-maker, has been actually proclaimed a Penal Settlement, and—Convict ships are actually on their passage to our shores!

Colonists, let not these honeyed accents cajole you into silence. Nothing but your own loud remonstrances, your own clamorous importunities, will secure your emancipation from the felon yoke. Be up, then—be up and doing. Put forth all your constitutional powers of resistance—only taking care that you exceed not constitutional bounds.

* By his advisers we mean those who are constitutionally such, and not that greedy nest of hornets who, for the sake of the good places which a revival of transportation would put at the Governor's disposal, take every opportunity of buzzing into His Excellency's ear, that the anti-convict outcry is nothing but a sham.

† It is a fact that, not many weeks ago, some young women just arrived in an emigrant ship, positively refused to be landed from the steamer at Kissing Point, for which place they had accepted engagements, on the ground that instead of a village, which they had been led to expect, they found nothing but the bush!

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

SUPREME COURT.—Thursday.

Before the three Judges.

APPEAL.

WHITNEY v. NORTON AND OTHERS.

The applicant not appearing, Mr. Dowdell applied on behalf of the respondents to have it dismissed with costs.

Granted.

IN THE INTESTATE ESTATE OF —— POWER.

This was a rule nisi under the Law Simplifying Act, asking for an account under the following circumstances:—From the affidavits on which the rule nisi was granted, it appeared that there had been a partnership between the deceased and one James Burke (against whom the rule was granted) as to some cattle.

The Master in Equity, as the Curator of Intestate Estates, moved to make the rule absolute.

Mr. Lowe, for James Burke, showed cause, reading an affidavit denying that there was a partnership between him and the deceased. It was contended, that if the Court should think the partnership had been established, yet still as Burke had since the death of Power taken care of his children, he would be entitled to a sum of money, more than equal to the supposed half share, now claimed by the representatives of Power. It was suggested that, as the estate was but a small one, the least expensive order of reference be made.

The Court ordered that the matter be referred to Colonel Morrisset of Bathurst, and upon his report coming in, the matter might be mentioned again.

LONG v. CRAMPTON AND OTHERS.

Mr. Michie moved, on behalf of the defendants, for judgment as in case of nonsuit, the plaintiff not having gone to trial pursuant to the practice of the Court.

Granted.

MARSH v. BURNETT.

During the present term a new trial was granted herein, on one issue only. The venue was at Maitland, and it was tried before a special jury of twelve persons.

Mr. Darvall now, on notice, moved to change the venue to Sydney, and to have the case tried before a jury of four.

Mr. Broadhurst showed cause, contending that either branch of the motion must fail. It was too late now to change the venue, as the case had been once tried. It was also too late to change the tribunal of trial, as the plaintiff had once run his chance of getting a verdict before the tribunal of his own choosing, and now ought not to quarrel with it. This part of the application might have succeeded had it been asked when the new trial was granted: citing Hingarty v. Sinclair, and Beckham v. Potter, decisions of this Court.

Mr. Darvall replied.

The Chief Justice said, that the majority of the Court were of opinion the motion ought to fail, but not with costs.

BRYANT v. IBBOTSON.

This case was tried before His Honor Mr. Justice Manning and a Jury of four, during the last nisi prius sittings. The action was trespass, and sought damages for the breaking and entering the house of the plaintiff, and taking therefrom his goods and chattels. The whole circumstances prior to the issuing the writ in question did not appear in evidence. However, this much appeared, that the plaintiff sequestrated his estate in the Insolvent Court; the defendant had a judgment against him which was not satisfied at the time of the sequestration. The plaintiff's estate was eventually released from sequestration under the Act; the defendant then applied to one of their Honors, in Chambers, who granted the defendant leave to issue the writ a pluries fi. fa. to get satisfaction of his judgment, it at the time being more than a year and a day old. The defendant then levied under the writ, and was active in pointing out the goods. Afterwards, this very writ was set aside by the full Court, and it was for the this very levying that the plaintiff complained. For the defendant it was contended, he was not answerable for the issuing the pluries writ, as it was done pursuant to an order of a Judge, and therefore that he ought to have a verdict.

His Honor, in summing up, said, he was of opinion that the defendant was protected by the order of the Judge in putting the writ in force, and accordingly so directed the Jury, who found for the defendant.

The Solicitor-General and Mr. Michie appeared for the plaintiff, and contended that the verdict was wrong. This was an action of trespass, and not case; the defendant merely having pleaded the general issue; it was clear upon the authorities that the plaintiff must have a verdict. The defendant did the act complained of; he put the Court in motion; he was only authorised to do that which he did, and was not directed. The simple issue was, that he did not do the act; had he set out in a special plea the order of the Judge, then the case might be different. Under the general issue the defendant cannot show that the issuing the writ was the act of the Judge.

Mr. Lowe appeared for the defendant in support of the verdict, contending that the verdict was right in this form of action. The plaintiff ought to have framed his action in case, and then falsified the affidavit on which the order was issued. However, whether there was mis-directions or not, this was an application to the discretion of the Court, and the Court will not grant a new trial if it can be seen that no good can be done by sending the case again for trial. The case proved was this—that the house where the trespass took place was not the dwelling-house of the plaintiff, but was merely a back room in another person's residence,—where the plaintiff kept a few articles of office furniture. The Sheriff did not leave any one in charge, and the plaintiff might at any moment have had the use of his furniture. The action was therefore of a most trumpery nature,—and if sent down to trial again, no jury would give more than a farthing damages.

His Honor the Chief Justice said, he was of opinion there had been misdirection here, and that there must be a new trial. The case of Bryant v. Clatton, 1 M. and W., was decisive on the point. Here it could not be said that the issuing the writ was the act of the Judge, the Judge merely authorised the party to issue the writ at his option; and having done so, he is liable in trespass. If he were not so liable in the first instance, yet the active steps he afterwards took in pointing the goods out to be levied upon, would make him so.

Mr. Justice Dickinson said the case cited by the Chief Justice decided the case.

Mr. Justice Manning said, he was of the same opinion, having arrived at this conclusion now upon reading the case of Bryant v. Clatton, which was not, however, before him at the trial; and though now he could not exactly understand the ground on which that case was founded, yet, being an authority, he must be bound by it.

A new trial was therefore granted on the usual terms.

IN THE WILL OF SARAH BAYLIS.

Mr. Darvall, upon the usual affidavits, moved that probate be granted to the executor therein named.

Granted.

PATERSON v. KNIGHT

Anti-Transportation.—A meeting, attended by about 200 persons, was held last evening, at the School Room, Miller's Point, for the purpose of forming a Ward Committee, in Gipps Ward, to make arrangements for the great protest demonstration. Mr. Robert Campbell was voted into the chair, and resolutions were passed unanimously, concurring in the proposed demonstration, and appointing a committee of twenty-five citizens, with power to add to their number. Another meeting was held last evening in Phillip Ward, Parramatta-street, at Mr. O'Flaherty's, for a similar purpose.

Police Office.—Captain Innes disposed of the business on the drunkard list yesterday, and the two magistrates for the day (Messrs. D. Cooper and J. Campbell) proceeded with the other business, except some cases remanded from the preceeding day, which were taken by Aldermen Thurlow and Brown in the second Court. The Mayor also took his seat on the bench. The business of the day was concluded before eleven o'clock in the forenoon. Aldermen Egan and Mr. Fanning are the magistrates for this day (Friday.)

Sunday Selling.—Andrew Guy and George Simpson, licensed victuallers, were yesterday convicted of breaches of the Licensing Act, in selling on Sunday, and were each sentenced to pay a fine of 40s. and costs.

Licensing Session.—The adjourned meeting of the Licensing Magistrates will be held at the Police Office at noon to-day.

Stealing Shop Goods.—Two cases of this description came before the police bench yesterday. One was a charge preferred against a man named Goodman for stealing a pair of tweed trousers, which were exposed for sale at the door of a tailor named Piper, in Pitt-street. The theft was observed by a lad named Connor, in Mr Piper's employ, but the thief got out of sight. Information having been given to Constable Singleton, that officer instituted a search, and found the prisoner concealed in a water closet not far from the scene of the robbery. The other case was that of stealing seven boots from the shop door of Mr. Vickery, boot maker, in George-street, about nine o'clock the same evening. A boy in Mr. Vickery's shop saw the theft, and ran after the man crying "stop thief." The man however got out of sight, but was subsequently seen by the boy in Market-street, when he gave him into the custody of Constable Kennon. One pair of boots, the prisoner, who gave his name as Charles Perkins, was seen to drop shortly after leaving the shop, and another pair was picked up between the Market buildings. Both were committed to take their trial at the Quarter Sessions.

Colonial Produce.—At Mr. Mort's produce sale yesterday, the following prices were realized:—Wool—112 bales: 2 at 13¾d. per lb., 2 at 11½d., Barker's washing; 10 at 11½d., 8 at 10¾d., 22 at 10½d., 4 at 10d., 7 at 9½d., 7 at 9¼d., 7 at 9d., 5 at 8d., 2 at 7 gence, and enterprise, has determined upon taking advantage of the singular adaptation of this climate to the cultivation of the mulberry tree, for the purpose of rearing silk-worms on a large scale. There is, perhaps, no spot on earth where the mulberry tree flourishes better than in Mauritius. A few years, we had almost said a few months, suffice to convert an uncultivated waste, into a forest of mulberry trees. Nor is the rapid growth of this tree its only virtue. The leaves of the Mauritius mulberry are said to contain a more than common share of the ordinary nutriment of the silk-worm. The spinning process moreover is not, amongst us, exposed to the interruptions occasioned by those rapid alternations of season and of temperature which exert so hurtful an influence upon the same process in Europe:—for, such is the general equability of temperature, combined with the prolific character of vegetation in Mauritius, that the trees are rarely stripped of one crop of leaves, before a fresh crop is ready to take their place. The gentleman to whom we have referred has already taken measures for engaging the assistance of persons who have practical experience of the most approved methods of conducting the process of rearing silk-worms, and he proposes to commence operations as speedily as possible. To us, the whole scheme seems to be founded upon the fairest calculations, and we do most earnestly hope and believe that it will not fail to meet with the most encouraging success.

But we have many other resources at hand besides silk. In a recent number of the Mauritius Times, we published an extract from Chambers's Edinburgh Journal, which clearly shows the interest that has been excited in England, by the successful attempts lately made in Mauritius, to cultivate vanilla and tea. The Mauritius vanilla is admitted to be of a very superior quality,—superior even to the vanilla of Brazil, which now commands a price almost as high as that of Mexico. It is indeed true that, in consequence of the limited demand for vanilla in England, and the circumstance that it has hitherto been almost altogether an article of foreign production, the duties on its importation into England are very high. But there can be no doubt that as soon as vanilla should become a regular production of our own colonies, these duties will be reduced—the article itself will become cheaper—and its cheapness will beget the taste which has not hitherto been developed.

We have never been able to understand why the cultivation of tea, which was so successfully prosecuted by Mr. Jaunet, has been altogether abandoned. Mr. Jaunet had many serious disadvantages to contend with. His attempt was a first experiment. No considerable outlay of capital was devoted to it. It was prosecuted by him rather as an amateur, than as a man whose fortune was at stake; and yet, in spite of every unfavourable circumstance, he managed to produce a tea which was pronounced by some experienced tea brokers in London to be of a most excellent quality. We know one great tea drinker in Mauritius who, so long as Mr. Jaunet's tea lasted, would never purchase any other. It should also be remarked, that the cultivation of tea is admirably adapted to the capabilities of our Indian labourers, inasmuch as it requires rather care and attention, than exhausting physical labour.

It is moreover a matter of wonder with some in Mauritius, that more attention is not devoted to the cultivation of the cocoanut tree. It is remarkable that this tree flourishes best in the immediate neighbourhood of the sea, precisely the spot which is least adapted by nature to the ordinary forms of vegetable life. The consumption of cocoanut oil in Mauritius alone is enormous. It is at present supplied altogether from abroad, and so irregularly that it is often difficult to obtain it but at a most extravagant price. We are aware of the privilege possessed by those islands from which our market is supplied. But even if those privileges were maintained, the oil produced here would, without difficulty, find a good market elsewhere. In estimating the advantages to be derived from cultivating the cocoanut, we must not omit to notice the great value which is now attached to the fibre of the nut itself. This is now an important article of commerce, and is used almost as extensively as horse-hair for stuffing beds, sofas, chairs, &c. It has indeed been objected, that the cocoanut tree is of slow growth, and that it takes some years to come to perfection. This objection, however, seems only to furnish an additional reason why no time should be lost in planting it abundantly,—especially as this can be done at a very trifling outlay of money and labour.

One word more. Nothing has contributed so much to derange all the monetary affairs of this island, as our complete dependance upon distant countries for all the ordinary necessaries of life. Not only have the commercial dealings of the colony been injuriously affected by this circumstance, but we have repeatedly been troubled by serious apprehensions of a general scarcity of provisions. Ever since the year 1843, the Government has repeatedly drawn the attention of the planters to the immense importance of devoting some portion of their land to the cultivation of manioc, and other nourishing food for their labourers. Nobody has ever yet questioned the wisdom of this counsel. But the temptations offered by the old protective system were strong enough to prevail over all the advice of the Government, and all the prudent suggestions of disinterested observers. The fields were still crowded with canes. It was, in fact, to be expected that so long as sugar was specially favoured,—so long as the price of sugar was artificially stimulated by protection,—the proprietors of land would not waste any chance of profit by cultivating anything else. But things are now changed. In a very short time protection will no longer exist, and then we may fairly hope, that ordinary calculations of profit and loss will induce many a landed proprietor to turn his unprofitable canefields into profitable provision grounds. If only a fourth part of the land now cultivated in canes were devoted to the raising of maize, manioc, oats, and rice, we should shake off our dangerous dependence upon India and the Cape,—we should save our population from all apprehensions of famine, and we should secure our monetary circulation from those violent alternations of plethora and exhaustion which have, of late years, exposed our commercial transactions to such constant risk and uncertainty.

We have made the foregoing remarks in the hope chiefly of inducing those who have specially directed their attention to the various capabilities of the soil and climate of Mauritius, to communicate the results of their studies and experience to the public. The subject is fortunately one which can in no way suggest matter for controversial bitterness. Although it involves considerations of the highest political importance to the colony, it relates, at the same time, to pursuits so purely scientific, that the most retired student may discuss it in all its branches, without the slightest apprehension that his labours will be attributed to any other motive but the praiseworthy desire of making his scientific knowledge available for the general good. Our invitation has been frankly given; we trust that it will be as frankly accepted.

SMALL PROFITS.—The advantages pointed out by physiology on farming produce may be objected to as scarcely appreciable, and therefore of no moment. All natural processes are of this kind. The mass is made out of minims. And if manufacturing prosperity consists of vast returns resulting from small profits, why should not agricultural prosperity be built upon a similar basis? Produce must be increased in every possible way, and that produce secured to the most profitable end; so that he who guides the loom in the manufactory, to produce fabrics of the most subtile texture with the most consummate skill, and eke out his recompense from farthings and half farthings accumulating by thousands, and he who guides the never-tiring loom of nature, must pursue the self same plan, and out of the secret processes of the same, which meet not the eye of the looker on, find his reward in the vast aggregation of very small advantages. If we mean to farm well, we must employ our capital in encouraging produce to extend itself in every minute particular, and then so secure that produce that not a particle of its value be lost to us as producers, nor to the community as consumers.—Mr. Just, in Memoirs of Manchester Philosophical Society.

LEEDS MEETING ON COLONIZATION.

(From the Leeds' Mercury.)

THE treatment which the deputation from the Society for promoting Colonization experienced from the Chartists, on Monday evening last, in our Court House, was, to say the least of it, both ungracious and unmerited: in the opinion of every body besides the majority on that occasion, it also reflects great discredit upon all who participated in it. The intelligent and respectable gentlemen who had come from London at their own expense, with the sole object of communicating authentic information on a subject in which lively interest is felt by thousands of individuals of all ranks of society, might surely have been permitted to do this without having their motives impugned, and their information scornfully rejected; and all who had attended to put inquiries on points affecting their own future prospects and welfare, or those of parties in whom they are interested, might (without harm, one should think, to a single mortal have been allowed an opportunity which possibly would never recur. So would common sense and common decorum suggest; but an occasion to abuse the aristocracy before at least one of its members, and to broach impracticable schemes of home-colonization, was too tempting to the Chartist speakers and their adherents, and therefore better considerations were not listened to. In the resolution proposed by the Hon. Francis Scott, M.P., and supported by the other members of the deputation, there was not even a syllable which clashed with either Mr. O'Connor's or any other land-scheme. It was expressed in the following words:—

> That with the view of meeting the urgent demand for labour in the Australian and other colonies, and to relieve the necessities of a considerable number of our fellow-countrymen at home, it is expedient that a well organised system of emigration be established.

Had the meeting been convened to consider the best means of shipping off to Australia Mr. Councillor Brook and his friends, or anybody else, without their own consent, there would have been some excuse for the opposition raised by the parties interested to a motion declaring such exportation inexpedient; but when that opposition is offered to the assertion of two undeniable facts, viz.:—the existence of a want of labourers in Australia, and the existence of distress among many of our operatives at home, which leads them to desire the means of emigrating in order to supply that want; and when the only conclusion drawn from these facts is that a judicious and trustworthy system for gratifying the desire and relieving the necessities of such operatives should be adopted, no such excuse is to be received. We are not, therefore, surprised at the strong language employed by the Mayor at the close of the proceedings, to express his own opinion of conduct so uncourteous and unjustifiable.

Perhaps, however, the best comment upon that conduct is furnished by the proceedings of a meeting held in Bradford the following evening, on the same subject. On that occasion, Mr. Logan was the only speaker connected with the Colonization Society; but the information he had to offer, (and which was given with all the clearness and point that marked his address at Leeds) was received by a meeting of above 2000 persons, mostly operatives, with deep interest and thankfulness. The time which intervened between his speech and the dispersion of the assembly was, moreover, usefully occupied by questions from workmen and others, to which he returned plain and satisfactory answers. Which of the two meetings will stand the higher in the estimation of impartial persons we need not say.

Though the Chartists succeeded in defeating the immediate object of the assemblage at Leeds, we are happy to say that its ultimate design will be carried out by the formation of a local branch of the Society for Promoting Colonization. The value of such branch will be learnt from the speech of our late Mayor, in opening the proceedings on Monday, and from his references to the cruel frauds lately practised in several parts of the country on poor people desirous of improving their condition by emigration. We have no doubt the project will meet with cordial support from gentlemen anxious to benefit their fellow-men, and protect them from imposition.

THE FREE COLOURED STATE OF LIBERIA.

(From the Standard)

WE have so often drawn the attention of our readers to the settlement of Liberia, on the west coast of Africa, its utility, condition, and importance, that it is unnecessary for us to recur to these topics at any length. We stated many months ago the fact, that it had declared its independence, and we have now the pleasure and satisfaction to state that both the British and French governments, as also, we believe, that of the United States, have readily acknowledged that independence, and entered into treaties of amity and commerce with the new and interesting state. President Roberts, the head of the Republic, who has effected these treaties, leaves London in a few days, with his family, to return to his position as chief magistrate of the new state, a passage being readily and properly given to them by our government in a man-of-war proceeding to the coast of Africa. We wish them a prosperous voyage and every success.

This is one step in the right direction. From Cape Palmas to Cape Mount inclusive, a line of 320 geographical miles of the African coast, has been, by the enterprising settlers of Liberia, and without any aid but what worthy individuals in the States contributed, saved from the atrocious slave trade, and also from slavery; and an enlightened and Christian population settled upon it under a regular and a free government. The greatest praise is due to President Roberts for the judgment, the prudence, the energy, and the perseverance which he has long shown in surmounting the difficulties that he had to contend with, and in bringing matters in Liberia to their present satisfactory state. He has much yet to do, but the worst, we think, is over, and in future we consider that his way will be comparatively easy, and not many years can elapse before Liberia must become a most important place for agriculture and commerce, and a centre whence civilisation, industry, peace, and true religion will spread into and over a large portion of the most benighted and hitherto neglected part of Western Africa.

The climate of Liberia is good, and, even along the sea coast, comparatively healthy; while, advancing into the interior, it becomes still more salubrious, the land rising gradually and abounding in fine streams of excellent water. But these streams are small, a proof that the elevated land, where they take their rise in the interior, is at no great distance. Farther into the interior, and towards the sources of the Joliba, or Niger, the country becomes very mountainous, and is at the same time generally populous. From these mountainous districts the Mahomedan Moors from the north obtain considerable quantities of gold dust. Beyond the mountainous range, in about 8 degrees 30 minutes north latitude, the population (Mandingo) becomes Mahomedan, and both commerce and agriculture are carried on by them to a great extent; Sego and Jenne, on the Niger, being the points from which they start, and to which they in the first instance return. The soil of Liberia is generally very fertile, producing abundantly every tropical production, especially coffee; and flocks and herds of every description thrive well and are abundant. A numerous population in these parts will soon flock to the territories, and seek the protection of the authority of Liberia, while the countries round the sources of the Niger (about 250 geographical miles northward from Monrovia), being now the seats of the terrible slave-trade for the supply of both the internal and external markets, will be entirely freed from it. The example that the free population of Liberia are setting and will set, must quickly teach the population of this western portion of Africa that wealth, prosperity, independence, and security, consist in cultivating their own soil, and selling the valuable produce of it, in order therefrom to derive the means to supply their increasing and civilised wants, instead of selling one another to foreigners to cultivate foreign lands. In this way the slave trade, and also slavery itself, will be put down in Africa. In this way only can both these curses and scourges of humanity be put down and kept down, for as we have ever maintained, it is in Africa itself, and by African hands mainly, that this important result is to be brought about—a result which the cupidity and stupidity of European nations have hitherto prevented.

St. Paul's River—a considerable but rapid stream enters the sea near Monrovia, the capital. Its principal sources are towards the celebrated hill of Loma—its course, in its early part, is about south, then south-west, and afterwards west-south-west to the sea. It is about 500 feet broad, at a distance of about 120 geographical miles from the Atlantic. The well-known Kroo country is included in the territory of Liberia, and thus terminates, happily for Africa and also for the West Indies, the delusion that has so long been maintained in England, by certain interested but very credulous parties, that from its scanty population (from 20,000 to 30,000 at the utmost) the West Indian colonies were to be filled with people and labourers to make sugar and rum sufficient for the supply of the whole human race. President Roberts will, if we mistake not, and if he does his duty, as we are sure he will do, keep them at home and export the sugar when he makes it, instead of exporting the people, or suffering them to be exported to the western world or anywhere else.

Such states as Liberia, administered by men like President Roberts, will, when extended in Africa, soon render preventive squadrons unnecessary on the African coast, and strike a deadly blow at the slave-trade and all its abettors and supporters, either in this or in any other country in the world; while it will certainly annihilate Lord Grey's magnificent vision, announced by him in the House of Lords two years ago—namely, to get Kroomen to cross and re-cross the channel from Africa to the West Indies, there to assist in "reaping the cane harvest," in the same manner as the Irish labourers cross and re-cross the channel between Ireland and Great Britain to assist in reaping the corn harvest in this country.

THE GOVERNMENTS OF THE EMPIRE

(From the Spectator.)

IF the English nation had any degree of sensitiveness on the score of theoretical propriety, it never could endure the anomalous absurdities which exist in its scheme of government. With the most extensive empire in the world, it has within the scope of its authority every sort of government, from the purely military rule of Aden to the democratic monarchy of Canada. But the variation does not correspond with the variation of the subject races. There is, for example, no difference in the constituent population between Jamaica with its complete representation and Guiana with its mockery of representation. The scheme of Government for the whole colonial empire, and that for India afford a still wider contrast.

India is governed in London by a twofold authority—the Court of Directors and the Board of Control. The Board of Control is a branch of the ordinary Executive Government; but the Court of Directors is remarkably constituted. All persons having any kind of interest in Indian affairs in any quality themselves, by the purchase of India Stock, to vote in the election of the Directors; who are obliged to possess some sort of qualification to engage the predilections of the voters. Take the latest example, Mr. Woodhouse Currie asks the suffrages of the proprietors, and sets forth his claims. He is a partner in a well-known banking-house, and therefore a man personally responsible for promoting the order and well-being of the empire. He has made a three years' tour of India, becoming acquainted with its actual condition, its practical wants, and its mode of government; his tour has extended to outlying provinces seldom visited by the European—for Mr. Currie is the traveller whose informing and animated letters from Rajpootana enriched our pages about a twelvemonth ago. He has traversed India from Ceylon to the Himalayah mountains; spending months in the society of the Natives, speaking their language, and familiarizing himself with their usages: he has in such mode studied Cashmire, the Punjaub, and Rajpootana, and finished his education as a future candidate for governing in the society of officials in India. He knows India from top to bottom, geographically, socially, and politically. These are the qualifications on which Mr. Wodehouse Currie relies. It is true that every candidate for election to the Court of Directors cannot hold out qualifications so studiously complete and extended; but at least every candidate must be able to show some reason why the addition of his name to the list of Directors will be advantageous to the government of India, and to the interests of persons connected with India.

Contrast this with the London government of the Colonies, by a Secretary of State and his clerks. There is no Colonial Council like the Indian Council which the Directors constitute. What voice have the colonies, or any of them, or any of their connexions, in appointing a single clerk? What knowledge of the colonies is required to an appointment? What candidate for office thinks it incumbent on him to traverse the whole of the colonial empire, from Stewart's Island to the Lake of the Woods, from Hongkong to Demerara? Most Secretaries for the Colonies have visited Paris and Rome; but it is not necessary that any of the department should have been even to the Cape of Good Hope. A direct connexion with a colony, indeed, is a disqualification for office, because few colonists are "gentlemen." No, you need not know much about the colonies, to share in their government: the great point is, that you should be an opponent of "systematic colonization," and a systematic supporter of the Anti-Colonial Office.

PARIS CLUBS IN LONDON.

(From Punch.)

VERILY, the Clubs may be abolished in Paris, but there's no shutting one's ears to the fact that they exist with equal fury in London. They have taken refuge in the coffee shops, and the different restaurateurs about Leicester-square. Enter any of the cafés, where the long beards must do congregate, and try to get through a newspaper. A hundred voices, each shouting its loudest, soon makes nonsense of the very best leader. The noise completely ruins all attempt at reading. It is a perfect Babel de Paris. It gives you a faint notion what the National Assembly must be. Every Frenchman is talking at once. In vain is silence implored; the discussion still continues and the arguments wax so warm, that you imagine every minute they can only be settled by blows. There is generally a representative of every class of opinion. Henry V. (that never was, and never is to be) finds his champion in some closely cropped enthusiast, and the réactionaires prophesy all sorts of revolutions yet to come. Royalists, Legitimists, Bonapartists, all contribute to the din; and they talk so earnestly and confident that you are persuaded they must be, at least Guizot or Louis Napoleon, or Joinville, in disguise. Communism even has its rabid oracles, and they are generally of the loudest. On one of our visits we heard one prophet declare that "all goods ought to be equally divided;" and certainly his system had one advantage, for, judging from his appearance he could not possibly be a great sufferer by it himself. We involuntarily shifted our quarters to the other end of the room. His denunciations made us tremble for the safety of our breakfast; for we naturally expected that he would begin sharing our ham and eggs, and help himself to half our tea, as a simple matter of right. He was very mild, however; a perfect Danton in speech, but a gentle Béranger in demeanour. He wished the room "Bonjour," with all the amiability of a "bon enfant," and walked out with his own umbrella.

There was one republican who, we confess, somewhat alarmed us. We do not know whether he belonged to the Social Republic, or to the Democratic, or to the Red, or White, Tricolour, Purple, Green, or to what particular shade of the numerous series of polychromatic Republics. Suffice it to say, he started us by loudly asserting that—"All property was a theft!" We had a sovereign at the time (we hope no one will think us proud) in our pocket, and felt very uneasy less this mad disciple of Monsieur Proudhon should denounce us as a public robber. A certain panic was created, also, in the room. Coats were buttoned up, and several of the most timed asked very suddenly "what they had to pay." We did not linger long. The discussion was very interesting at first, from its peculiarity; but the novelty soon lost its charm when we discovered that two of the apostles entertained such very peculiar opinions. We left the place in safety, though the latter gentleman followed us down stairs with no other intention, as we thought, than that of tearing the coat off our backs, and carrying off our diamond pin, if only to prove his favourite theory that "all property was a theft." We are weak enough to confess we should not like to lodge in the same house with that man!

These discussions are continued, it seems, upon une séance permanente. We passed the café at eleven o'clock at night, and they were speaking altogether, in the same loud strain, as when they spoilt our breakfast. Now we like to read the morning newspapers quietly by ourselves. It is the enjoyment with which we always open the day; but we defy any one to tell what the funds are, or to make out a single word of last night's interesting debate, whilst fifty clamorous Frenchmen are throwing into your ears such horrible truths, as that all "goods ought to be equally divided," and that "property is nothing better than a theft." Admirable laws these, doubtless, for a nation of pickpockets, of which Newgate was the capital, but scarcely adapted for industrious persons, who have to learn that meum and tuum mean exactly the same thing whether in French or in English. These wild émigrés of the Parisian Clubs should have a room to themselves. In the mean time, we only say, "Landlords, look to your spoons."

THE CUSTOM-HOUSE "BITER BIT."

(From the Atlas.)

> Then says Roger before you do go,
> I'll just get you to see my permit.

SOME amusement has been created in commercial circles during the past week, by the discovery of a blunder committed by the Custom-house officials, such as, we must say, for the business reputation of these gentlemen, does not often occur. Most of our readers are, no doubt, aware that in order to prevent parties importing goods at a fictitious value, for the purpose of avoiding payment of the proper duties, the Custom-house authorities are empowered to purchase any goods entered at the price offered on them by the importer, with an additional ten per cent., which is allowed as a margin in his favour. Accordingly every now and then some very advantageous purchases are made in this way; goods entered at a very low value realising a handsome profit for the Exchequer when sold at the Custom-house sales. The "Preventive men" in Thames-street, are in general very good judges of "real values," and those who can occasionally cheat them are almost entitled to the profits on their roguery for their skill. There are only a few cases of the kind on record, and they are well remembered by "her Majesty's customs," though we think the last one the best, and that it will keep the longest. Of these cases one is—that a large quantity of gloves having been entered at a price obviously much below their value, they were seized and duly paid for by the authorities; but on being put to sale it was discovered that they were all right hand gloves, and were bought at a very low figure by parties who were strongly suspected of having obtained the fellows without paying duty at all!

At another time, a vast quantity of pills were entered in the Customs' books at a price so much below the charge made for them by the quacks who deal in such rubbish, that they were at once seized and paid for like the gloves. The Customs, however, "have no skill in surgery," and the pills were taken (into the warehouse) with no better result than in the former case, for it was soon discovered that although the pills were sold at "two and ninepence" the box, their intrinsic value was only a few pence; and it was with extreme difficulty that they were sold even at this price; for very few of the persons who attended the sale were inclined to take some hundred weight of pills, even although they might be a specific for all earthly disorders. This case of the pills is quoted as "an authority" in Custom-house circles.

In the present instance the facts are said to be as follows: Seven hundred watches, apparently of superior manufacture, and in gold cases, were entered as worth £700 only, while they were valued at the Custom House as worth at least three times the amount. The importers were accordingly informed that the watches would be taken at £700 by the Government, and the amount was duly paid, with the ten per cent. addition allowed as already mentioned. They were brought to sale in due course, and have realised seventy pounds, the works being of very inferior manufacture, and the cases gilt. The Custom House is therefore minus something more than seven hundred pounds, and the importers have made a good thing of the transaction.

Moral—for Customs and Excisemen! Do not be in too great a hurry to seize goods which may to Custom House eyes appear better than they are: for if you do, like your namesake in the song, who carried the keg of spirits for the countryman, you may have a vast deal of trouble and very little profit for your labour.

THE PEELITES' "MODEL MINISTER."

(From the Morning Herald.)

A LATE very distinguished personage—second to none in St. James's-street, in his day—is not unfrequently referred to, as a high authority, by fops and pretenders of the present hour; and his example is accordingly very naturally cited in Sir Robert Peel's journal of Saturday last.

Mr. Brummell was, we believe, the son of a pastry cook in the Haymarket, who, by his own consummate impudence, and the folly of many noblemen who were subdued by it, was allowed to appoint himself the leader of fashion at the close of the last century. This tradesman's son used to take a dake between his finger and thumb, turn him round, and exclaim, "Well, now, Bedford, do you call that a coat?" And with much the same cool assurance have we seen the modern Brummell of the House of Commons, permit the Earl of Lincoln, fourteenth of that name, to help on his great coat, or a Jocelyn, of a thousand years' antiquity, to take charge of his hat and umbrella! All this, however, is trivial, and would never have been alluded to, if the Chronicle had not insisted on the propriety and justice of Sir Robert Peel's treating the country gentlemen of England after the pattern set by Bond-street Peel of the last century.

It is supposed,—and the supposition is evidently not at an improbable one,—that the present Ministry may go out of office, and that the country party may have a principal share in their expulsion. And here is the openly declared view of one of Sir Robert Peel's confidential friends and advisers, as to what would and ought to follow:

"But suppose the Whig government were, by some inconceivable accident, actually thrown out by the puny instrumentality of these gentlemen, would the country endure such successors for an hour? Or could any noble lord or illustrious commoner, entrusted with the formation of a cabinet,—nay, even Lord Stanley himself—return any other answer to their claims of seats in it, than one resembling that given by Brummell to the late Mr. R., who, on looking over the list (made out by Brummell) of the party who were to dine at his house with the view of bringing him into fashion, complained that his own name was omitted. 'Why, really, my dear fellow, we must proceed by steps—you give the dinner, but as for your dining with us—I'll speak to Alvanley and Pierrepont; but it strikes me to be entirely out of the question this time.'"

This may be considered to be tolerably cool. What is chiefly worth reflection is, the intoxicated conceit of these gentlemen, and the nature and character of the model they here adopt.

That model is—Beau Brummell! A man who never, in the whole course of his life, spent one hour as a rational being would wish to spend it. A man whose career of fifty or sixty years is marked with no one virtue—with no one act worthy of record. A man whose whole strength lay in his prodigious self-conceit; and whose success sprung from one sole cause, the folly of his contemporaries in "yielding worship to a baboon!"

Of all the outrageous follies and impertinences of his life, perhaps no greater could be pointed out than his cool proposition, to go to a man's house, eat his turtle and venison, drink his claret and burgundy, but reject with scorn the idea of allowing him to take a seat at his own table. Yet this absurdity, gross as it was, appears a very good model, in the eyes of the Chronicle, for Sir Robert Peel to follow, when-ever the country gentlemen of England shall have cleared the Whigs out of Downing street, and he shall be asked, as he fondly hopes to be asked, to form a new administration.

There is one point in the case which we do not dislike, and which we trust will never be falsified by the fact. We mean, that if Sir Robert Peel is to be at the table, we trust that the presence of the country party will be "entirely out of the question." We have no wish that it should ever be otherwise. But the pleasant part of the matter is, that the right honorable baronet and his friends are already evidently arranging their plan of proceedings; and that plan, based upon the model of Beau Brummell's party, is, that the country gentlemen are to open for them the way to office; and then that they, Brummell, Alvanley, and Co., are coolly to tell some 250 of the best members of the House of Commons, "for you to sit with us seems to be entirely out of the question."

Meanwhile, however, we feel indebted to the Chronicle for an exceedingly good parallel. We admit freely that the likeness between the deceased beau and the living baronet is very strong. In fact, they were both eminent in their day, and mainly by the exercise of the same talent. And so striking is the resemblance, when once pointed out, that we doubt if we shall ever again be able to listen to the right honorable baronet without having Beau Brummell brought forcibly to our recollection.

THE CHURCHMAN AND THE CHARTIST.—A writer, signing himself "A Country Parson," has given birth to a pamphlet, in the shape of a letter to the Venerable Archdeacon ——, on the advantages of authorised Street Preaching, "as a Remedy for our Social Evils." What the archdeacon may think about the matter we can only conjecture, but there is really more good sense in the pamphlet than we expected to find under so ominous a title. The "Country Parson" has a theory, and it is not a bad one; but, like all the fraternity of theorists, he has pushed it a little too far. Take it with a little abatement, and we shall not laugh it to scorn. The "Country Parson" says, that whilst the Chartists, and other inflammatory people do a good deal of business of their own by dint of open-air orations, the more peaceable and constitutional members of society have no mouth-pieces to preach down, in the streets and on the high roads, the sedition which everywhere finds utterance and everywhere finds an audience. He would establish an antagonist power to vanquish Chartism with its own weapons. He would set mob-preachers adrift in the world to carry away the congregations of the mob-orators. Why should not order and peace and good will towards men find a voice in the public ways as well as tumult and sedition, and class hatreds of the fiercest kind? So asks the "Country Parson"—and recommends the Church to license a certain number of ministers, for out-door preaching, that the poor may hear the word of God no less than the satanic promptings of the social incendiary. The argument, in plain language, just amounts to this. The Church must go forth into the highways if it would preach to the poor. To them a brick-and-mortar religion is but a dead letter. Churches are not for them. They are built for the rich. The preacher preaches for the rich. The stately building is not for paupers; rags and dirt defile and degrade it. The pompous official with the lace on his coat is disposed to sweep them away, and a busy policeman, peradventure, says that they can be there for no good purpose. So says the record of city missions and Scripture Readers' Societies. There are earnest full-hearted Christian ministers in the Church who acknowledge and deplore the fact that it is not within the consecrated edifice that they can hope to touch the hearts or convince the understandings of the great masses of the people. Whatever we may thing of authorised street preaching, it is but too true we are afraid, that as antagonist of the seditious mob-orator the Church minister can do little or nothing in his authorised pulpit, for his congregation is almost exclusively an aristocratic congregation. The meeting-house has greater attractions for the poor. Some do go to hear the dissenting preacher, but the greater number stay at home. Whether all this demonstrates the necessity for street preaching is not very apparent. It appears to us that the proposition, in its present shape, is somewhat premature. Let our Church ministers endeavour, in the first instance, to attract the poor to their consecrated preaching-houses, by shaping their discourses to the tastes and requirements of the poorer members of their congregations; and let something be done to establish ragged churches as well as ragged schools—churches, with no privileged seats—churches from which the want of a coat will present no cause of exclusion,—and then, the experiment fairly tried, let us talk about street-preaching. There are other less startling schemes of church reform than that proposed by the "Country Parson," which we should like to consider before we think more about his project.—Atlas.

THE "PARDON" OF MR. BARBER.—Sir George has at last yielded to common sense and the representations of influential persons. He is now convinced that Mr. Barber was innocent of the crime for which he was convicted and punished. It is now apparent to her Majesty's present adviser that an act of injustice has been done—that the law, not the convict, has committed an offence. Therefore he advises the Crown to grant Mr. Barber a "pardon" for having been falsely accused and wrongly convicted. The Home Secretary accompanies this act of stereotyped official generosity with some observations which surely might have been spared. It seems Sir George Grey thinks Mr. Barber acted imprudently—that by his confidence in those around him he laid himself open, not to suspicion, but to deliberate treachery; and we are therefore left to infer that the jury had some kind of excuse for their judgment. Why, what sort of morality is this? Investigate the transactions of the respectable lawyers and merchants of London, and you will find that it is in the very nature of things that they should so lay themselves open. It is the confidence prevailing throughout society in this country which gives it its moral weight. Admit, however, that Mr. Barber did more than act imprudently in the ordinary proportion, and yet we cannot see why Sir George Grey should have toured the "pardon" by this askance reflection. But we rather desire to call attention to the false principle involved in these Home Office "pardons." Surely it is time for society to review in these respects the acts of its delegates. If an injustice has been done, why should not atonement be made—an atonement as public as the injury, and commensurate with it? Why should Mr. Barber be insulted with a "pardon," and vexed by a Home Secretary's comments, when he ought to receive a public and official acknowledgment of the nation's regret that he should have been a sacrifice to the blundering of that judicial system which is maintained for the benefit of all? Will a "pardon," (with sinister comments) return to Mr. Barber his character, connections, business, prestige! No; experience tells us that the external taint is not wholly eradicable, even if internal ravages have not done their work. Ought we not, too, seriously to look at our jury system? These cases are accumulating with a fearful rapidity—an argument that past injustice must have been enormous, and that even at the present time there may be an immense amount of silent and undeserving suffering.—Atlas.

NEEDLESS OATHS IN LEGAL PROCEEDINGS.—A HINT TO THE LEGISLATURE.—Desiring to speak with the greatest possible diffidence, I nevertheless cannot help expressing a fear, that an oath is required far too frequently, and on utterly inadequate occasions, in the conduct of legal business; to an extent which is calculated to impair the sense of its awful character and incidents. Surely it is an act of tremendous significance, deliberately to invoke the Deity to witness that what is said on a given occasion is the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. I have sometimes shuddered at witnessing the unconcern, and even levity, with which oaths are administered and taken, so as to almost degenerate into mere irreverent form. In Scotland, the oath to witnesses is administered with a grand solemnity. The judge rises from his seat, and raising his right hand, requires the witness to do the same; and then, their hands remaining elevated, the witness repeats after the judge the following words:—"I swear by Almighty God, and as I shall answer to God at the great Day of Judgment, that I will tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth!" What could be more calculated to solemnise the mind, to search and quicken the conscience, than such an oath so administered? It might be as well, perhaps, if such were to be the practice in our own courts. However this may be, I appeal to every one present, whether oaths are not at present taken on a vast number of the most trivial occasions that can occur in the course of ordinary business, administered hurriedly—taken without adequate reflection on the nature of the act—given and taken, in fact, almost mechanically—the dread words "So help me God!" pronounced trippingly on the tongue, while the lips touch the sacred volume with hasty impatient action, the soul taking no part whatever in the matter! As if God had never uttered that awful command, "Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain; for the Lord will not hold him guiltless that taketh His name in vain." Gentlemen, if the public saw as much of these matters as you and I see, I think they would immediately urge upon our Christian legislature further steps in the direction which it has lately taken; I mean in enacting the statutes substituting declarations for oaths on many occasions. Why is it that our courts and judges, and often subordinate public officers, can receive, or set upon, no statement, on even the most trivial occasion, unless God Almighty be first called upon to witness that the deponent is telling them the truth? Ought this to be tolerated? Why not take a hint from the heathen poet?—"Ne Deus intersit nisi dignus vindice nodus!" God forbid that, on occasions of adequate importance, a person should not be required to pledge his oath deliberately to the truth of his statement—to the sincerity of his belief and intention; but in the name of all that is decorous and reverential, why should the same solemn ceremony be adopted in order to obtain a distringas—to set aside petty proceedings for trumpery irregularities—to satisfy the court or a judge of the due service of rules and notices—that there is a good defence to an action on the indictment—or, in an affidavit of increase, to satisfy the master of the truth of a paltry detail of pounds, shillings, and pence, paid to witnesses, in tavern expenses, and so forth! You know that I could occupy hours in enumerating the trifling occasions in which we audaciously venture thus to appeal to the Deity.—Warren's Duties of Attornies and Solicitors.

A BOAT UPSET IN THE SURF.—The captain had exchanged the jolly boat for a gig, sharp at both ends, but with much less beam than a whaleboat; we had raised her one streak, and being anxious to try her, I took the lead on shoving off, having with me Denman and Law, six men, and several bags; but finding her too deep, I advised Denman and Law to get into the pinnace or barge, and put also two heavy bags into the latter; when close to the bar I hove to, to bale out dry, and practise the men for crossing a surf. On entering the breakers I found them much heavier than I had anticipated, and from the first saw that it would be quite a mercy if we crossed safely. However, we got over four breakers beautifully, the boiling foam taking us with it at a most awful rate; the fifth followed us like an overhanging mountain, with its crest in the act of curling, and we rose to it just as it broke, becoming as it were a component part of the foam. My feeling was that of intense anxiety, and I at one time thought it would pass us, and had an encouraging "all right" on the top of my tongue, when the angry surf boiled up afresh. There was a crash, a cry, and in an instant we were struggling in the breakers, and never were men rescued from a more hopeless situation. My first impulse was to dive from under the boat, and just as I rose to the surface, I found myself grappled by a man who could not swim, whom I endeavoured to shake off, but finding that I could keep him up, told him to keep his hand on my shoulder, and took him to the boat, which kept constantly turning round and round like a cask; and the seas constantly breaking over gave us so little breathing time, that nearly all hope of being saved was taken away. It was a most awful moment, and all the people, places, and things, I had ever seen, seemed concentrated and present at the same instant to my mind's eye with a startling distinctness; then the misery of being cut off from all in rude health, unprepared to face my Maker, with succour close at hand, nerved us to make extraordinary exertions, and I mentally prayed for presence of mind, for I felt that the safety of the whole depended so entirely on me, that I used the whole of my breathing time in cheering up the three men who could not swim. All eyes were fixed on the barge close to us, and approaching rapidly, but every now and then hid by the overhanging crest of a wave which ingulphed us a second afterwards, keeping us down longer and longer as our strength failed us and we filled with water. She was almost within our reach when a furious breaker swept her past us with the speed of lightning, and buried us for some seconds. How plainly I saw the faces of all in the barge as they passed us, pale as death, with eyes straining with eager anxiety; but they were as helpless as ourselves, and half filled their boat in endeavouring to round to. My men now began to despair, and utter the most piercing cries, and one of them said, "Good bye, Mr. Barnard, I am going down;" but I tapped him on the shoulder, and told him to look at the pinnace, not then far from us, and we held on by the keel of the boat with the energy and despair of drowning men. At least six times did the surf wash me from one end of the boat to the other, my hand grasping the keel the whole length; still on came our rescuers, our only hope; some screeched and howled; others left the boat and swam towards the approaching one, and I exerted my remaining strength in calling out 'luff, luff,' fearing she would pass us like the barge; however we were all picked up but one poor boy, named Crapwell, who was probably taken down by a shark. I had grasped the bight of the jib sheet, and when hauled into the pinnace was quite exhausted and black in the face, and the men were much in the same plight. Fortunately the Chipoli was at anchor about three miles from us, and we received every attention and kindness from the American officers, and Dr. Tuckerman soon restored us with bottles of hot water at our feet and friction of warm blankets, and I remained on board, sending the boats on. We all suffered from an unquenchable thirst, and a great soreness in our backs and limbs; however, I was able to get to work the next day.—Barnard's Cruise in the Mozambique Channel.

CAPTAIN MARRYAT AS A MIDSHIPMAN.—On the 23rd of September, 1806, he entered the navy as a first-class boy, on board the Imperieuse, 44 guns, commanded by the illustrious Lord Cochrane. During his service under this gallant officer, which lasted until the 18th of October, 1809, he took part in more than fifty engagements, in which many ships of war and merchantmen were cut out, off the coast of France and in the Mediterranean. Having chased a ship in the Bay of Acrupon, which sought safety under the guns of a battery, Lord Cochrane resolved to cut her out, and young Marryat was one of the boarding party. He followed closely the first lieutenant, who headed the expedition, and who, at length, after his party had sustained a severe loss, succeeded in gaining the deck of the enemy. He had scarcely done so when, struck by thirteen musket balls, he fell back a corpse, knocking down his follower in his fall, who was

THOMAS SYDNEY COOPER, "THE ENGLISH PAUL POTTER."—The admirers of Mr. Cooper's Cuyp-like pictures will be gratified with the following anecdote of the early recognition of the painter's genius, pleasantly related by Miss Mitford, in her Belford Regis:—"Sometime in November, 1831, Mr. Cribb, an ornamental gilder in London, (King-street, Covent Garden,) was struck with a small picture—a cattle piece, in a shop window in Greek-street, Soho. On inquiring for the artist, he could learn no tidings of him; but the people of the shop promised to find him out. Time after time, our persevering lover of the arts called to repeat his enquiries, but always unsuccessfully; until about three months after, when he found that the person he sought was a Mr. Thomas Sydney Cooper, a young artist, who had been for many years settled at Brussels, as a drawing master, but had been driven from that city by the revolution, which had deprived him of his pupils, among whom were some of the members of the royal family; and, unable to obtain employment in London as a cattle painter, he had, with the generous self-devotion which most ennobles a man of genius, supported his family by making lithographic drawings of fashionable caps and bonnets. I suppose as a puff for some milliner, or some periodical which deal in costume. In the midst of this interesting family, and of these caps and bonnets Mr. Cribb found him; and deriving from what he saw of his sketches and drawings additional conviction of his genius, he immediately commissioned him to paint a picture on his own subject, and at his own price, making such an advance as the richest artist could not scruple to accept on a commission, conjuring him to leave off caps and bonnets, and foretelling his future eminence. Mr. Cribb says, that he shall never forget the delight of Mr. Cooper's face when he gave the order—he has the right to the luxury of such recollection. Well, the picture was completed: our friend, Mr. Cribb, who is not a man to do his work by halves, bespoke a companion, and while that was painting, showed the first to a great number of artists and amateurs, who all agreed in expressing the strongest admiration, and in wondering where the painter could have been hidden. Before the second picture was half finished, a Mr. Carpenter, (I believe that I am right in the name,) gave Mr. Cooper a commission for a piece, which was exhibited in May, 1833, at the Suffolk-street Gallery; and from that moment orders poured in, and the artist's fortune was made. It is right to add, that Mr. Cooper was generously eager to have this story made known, and Mr. Cribb as generously averse to its publication. But surely, it ought to be recorded for example sake, and for their mutual honour.—London Anecdotes.

THE DOCKS OF LIVERPOOL.—The extreme length of the river wall, which fronts the line of the Liverpool docks is within a few yards of four miles. The total water area now available amounts to upwards of 195 acres, and the total quay space to more than fourteen miles. There are in all twenty-one docks in operation, exclusive of graving docks, half-tide docks, and basins. Of these, five, comprising about thirty-three acres of water area, and nearly two miles of quay space, have been opened within the last few weeks. Two others, and a half-tide dock, which will yield together twenty-one acres of water area and one mile of quay space, are in a state of great forwardness.

The guage of the Arbroath and Forfar portion of the Aberdeen Railway has been altered from 5 feet 6 inches to what is termed the national or narrow guage of 4 feet 8½ inches; so that there is now a uniform guage from London to Perth, Dundee, and Aberdeen.

A lady was overheard in earnest discussion with a gentleman noted for tenacity to his own opinion. Waxing warm, the gentleman observed, "Mrs. C. facts are stubborn things." And the lady rejoined, "Then Mr. M., what a great fact you must be!"
